Spotlight on Russia takes a look at a legendary anchor.

The Anchor from the Cruiser “Krasny Kavkaz”

In December 1941, the Crimean peninsula was almost completely occupied by German troops. But Sevastopol still held on. Since the town had always been the main base of the Black Sea Fleet, Stalin I.V, the leader of the Soviet Union, ordered to keep Sevastopol at any cost. At the end of December, 1941, the situation was critical. And it was decided to distract the enemy from the town. The Headquarters of the Supreme Commander in Chief developed a red herring. Military ships had to bring naval forces, including people, food and military equipment to Kerch and Feodosia. One of the ship with fighters and weapon on its board was the cruiser “Krasny Kavkaz”. The cruiser approached Feodosia twice. It was on the 4th of January, 1942, when the ship came to the town for the second time. The weather was unsuitable for landing people. Severe frost reaching to 15 degrees, snowstorm and huge waves made it impossible to leave people on the shore under the constant fire from the enemy. But everybody knew, that it was necessary to complete the task. During the operation “Krasny Kavkaz” was attacked by the German
